Route through the Dehesa de Matallana, public mountain near Lora del Río with a beautiful environment composed mainly of pine trees, cork oaks and holm oaks.

I tried during the tour to avoid tracks and large roads, which is possible due to the innumerable paths, paths and trails that appear, divide, disappear, blur ... That is why it will be easy for us to lose the exact layout of the track, but for the same reason it should not cost us too much to resume it. Sometimes we will walk cross-country, although there are no really difficult areas, we almost always end up finding passage among the vegetation, although at some point we must go back a few meters and orient ourselves.

To note that at km 3.8 (waypoint "begins complicated section") I tried to progress through the Algarín stream, but after a few tens of meters and despite walking partly through its dry bed, I ended up having to retrace my steps due to the closure of the vegetation and narrowing of the channel. Perhaps the best thing is to ignore this round trip section.
